Misericordia tenets come alive through volunteer work in California, Louisiana, Texas, Guyana, Jamaica and Peru.

Misericordia mindful of economy

The recent momentum Misericordia University has experienced has it positioned well for the future.

Becoming a university invigorated the campus and academic communities and played an important role in the institution receiving regional acclaim and national recognition.

In recent years, Misericordia has added doctoral programs in the health sciences and an innovative Master of Business Administration program. MU also continues to grow its campus community in order to support the curricular and co-curricular needs of the student body.

More than $19 million has been invested in the last 10 years with the assistance of generous benefactors and state and federal grants. MU has added or renovated the Mary Kintz Bevevino Library, Banks Student Life Center, Mangelsdorf Field at the Anderson Outdoor Athletic Complex, Mercy Hall and Sandy and Marlene Insalaco Hall.

These investments in education and campus life have not been borne by students and their families through tuition dollars. More than 90 percent of the capital projects were paid with donations or grants.

To meet the growing needs for health care professionals, Misericordia University has purchased the former Frontier Communications building on Lake Street in April so it can expand the College of Health Sciences.

Forty-two percent of MU's full-time students and 30 percent of part-time students are enrolled in majors in the Health Sciences. Our Religious Sisters of Mercy institution has a strong history of developing health care professionals who are compassionate, well-educated and capable of dealing with the challenging demands of health care.

Misericordia needs alumni and constituency support in order to maintain the positive momentum. “The last few years have been remarkable at Misericordia,’’ says Sue Helwig, Vice President of University Advancement.

“The University has experienced tremendous growth in enrollment, academic programs and the physical plant. The recession has had an impact on everyone, but in order to provide appropriate academic opportunities and scholarships, Misericordia needs your support now more than ever to continue our carefully planned growth.”

The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania recognized Misericordia’s reputation for producing high-quality health care professionals. The state awarded the University $2,750,000 for the College of Health Science’s project through the Redevelopment Assistance Capital Program. An additional $750,000 was awarded by the Pennsylvania Department of Community and Economic Development.

Misericordia University is mindful of how the national economy has affected current and prospective students, and their families. With that in mind, the institution has taken the necessary steps to mitigate the impact the recession will have on the University and student body.

The Board of Trustees approved an appropriate 3.9 percent increase in tuition for the 2009-2010 academic year, the lowest in six years. Misericordia’s tuition remains the most affordable among private four-year colleges and universities in Northeastern Pennsylvania. Next year, tuition and fees will be $24,050 and room and board will rise by 4.1 percent to $10,050, which includes the top 265 meal plan. The limited increase reflects the University’s commitment to managing costs, while also maintaining its commitment to personal attention and challenging academics.

“Misericordia is cognizant about how the economy has affected our students and their families. In these trying times, a college degree remains the best investment one can make,” President Michael A. MacDowell said. “Due to solid financial planning, we are in the position to assist students and families that are facing different economic circumstances due to no fault of their own. Our admissions counselors and administration are working very hard to make sure that a private college education is within reach.”

Faith, service, academics

It has been almost one year since the 217 U.S. Catholic college presidents gathered at Catholic University to hear Pope Benedict XVI speak to educators. The Pope’s message was heartfelt and wonderfully received. He commented on how the goals of scholarship and higher education in America’s Catholic colleges and universities meld so well with the traditions of service to mankind.

For 85 years, Misericordia has successfully combined the rigors of a quality education with the Mercy ideals of mercy, service, justice and hospitality. As a Catholic university, the institution takes pride in its passion of delivering a quality education in an atmosphere where academic freedom is cherished and Catholic identity is upheld.

Recently, the Board of Trustees heard from several students who shared how their educational expertise and passion to serve others were exercised. Two represented the 10 students who, during their Christmas break, spent time in the poorest parts of Jamaica exercising their skills as nurses, physical therapists, speech-language pathologists and teachers with orphans and some of the “forgotten” elderly. Another group of students reported on the “Power of One” conference attended by 21 staff and 16 student representatives from 10 of the nation’s 18 Mercy colleges and universities. Over spring break, nine Misericordia students traveled to Laredo, Texas, to spend time with hundreds of the poorest and newest immigrants to the United States. Another group of students traveled to Slidell, La., where they helped rebuild homes destroyed by Hurricane Katrina.

In May, the 19th annual Guyana Experience will take place. While the students are still studying health sciences, education and business, they will put their learned skills to work, serving those in need.

The act of helping others is in itself a worthy undertaking. The act of helping others while applying newly acquired skills learned at MU is quite another. For this reason, a Misericordia education is perhaps the best combination of head and heart that any young person can encounter.

A good university should offer its students the opportunity to hear different points of view; to see different people. To learn that while color, race and lifestyles may differ, all people respond to caring and understanding given unselfishly and with meaning. In fact, a survey among faculty, staff, alumni and trustees undertaken by Dr. Mary Hinton, Assistant Professor of Religious Studies and Director of our core curriculum project, underscored this point. Dr. Hinton found that the most often cited skills and attitudes that current students, faculty, staff, and alumni feel Misericordia students should possess upon graduation are cultural competency and knowledge of diversity. It is appropriate that those associated with MU believe strongly in exposing students to diverse points of view and people which not only make our students better people, but the world a better place.
Dr. Nyein named Dean of the Center for Adult and Continuing Education

Misericordia University named Tun Kyaw Nyein, Ph.D., as Dean of the Center for Adult and Continuing Education.

Dr. Nyein is a native of Burma who comes to Misericordia from North Carolina Central University (NCCU), Durham, N.C., where he served as the director of the Division of Extended Studies and interim dean of the University College. He holds Bachelor of Medicine and Bachelor of Surgery degrees from the Institute of Medicine, Rangoon, Burma, a Master of Science in Health Science from Western Illinois University and a doctorate degree in health education from the University of Tennessee with a minor in exercise physiology.

At NCCU, Dr. Nyein provided administrative leadership to all facets of the University College, including distance education, continuing education, summer school, summer academic and sports, evening and weekend studies programs, and community engagement from 2005 to 2008. While he was acting dean, he managed the successful growth in distance education programs from an enrollment of 604 students in 2003-04 to 1,373 students from 2005 to 2007. Student credit hours and course offerings also rose substantially from 315 courses during this same period.

Dr. Nyein also served as the assistant dean at NCCU from 2001-2004. In that role, he was a member of the strategic planning committee and administrative team, and assisted the dean in identifying and developing new programs for emerging distance education markets and distance learning niche degree programs. Dr. Nyein was also the assistant director of distance education at NCCU from 1999-2001 and played an integral role in strategic planning and program development. He also took the lead in integrating the latest technology for online courses and training faculty.

Misericordia University’s new dean also has extensive experience as a faculty member at NCCU. He began as a graduate assistant in 1983 teaching undergraduate courses in the department of health sciences and was also an instructor, teaching associate and assistant professor in the departments of health education, health and safety, health and physical education and health education until 1999.

In Burma, Dr. Nyein was a house surgeon at Rangoon General Hospital and also was the research officer for the Ministry of Health, where he supervised a team of 12 nurses and staff that conducted field research on the transmission of Hepatitis B from mother to infant and conducted Hepatitis B vaccine trials under the direction of the World Health Organization.

The Charlotte W. Newcome Foundation’s legacy of giving has led to $12.4 million worth of scholarships for mature women students being awarded to institutions of higher education since it was chartered in 1979, including approximately $350,000 to Misericordia.

In 2008, the Foundation contributed $41,000 to MU, including $16,000 that was designated for the establishment of the Charlotte W. Newcome Endowed Scholarship Fund for Women with Children. The Women with Children program makes it possible for low-income single mothers to earn a college degree while living on campus with their children. Misericordia and the Foundation have been working together to ensure that mature women students realize their collegiate and professional goals. The Newcome Foundation established the need-based Newcome Scholarships for Mature Women Students at Misericordia in 1987. Since then, the Foundation has awarded $292,000 to female students who are 25 years of age or older, are enrolled full time or part time in baccalaureate degree programs and have completed half the credits required for the degree. In addition, the Foundation has contributed an additional $42,000 to support an endowment in the Newcome name. “We consider ourselves fortunate to have a partner such as the Charlotte W. Newcome Foundation to help us continue our tradition of making a private, liberal arts education affordable to mature women,” says President Michael A. MacDowell. “We commend their efforts to alleviate barriers that can inhibit academic success for these women and look forward to continuing to work together on this important goal.”

Recent recipients of the scholarship have diverse backgrounds and majors, but have one common theme — need. “The Foundation has taken a financial burden from my family and helped me pursue my academic dreams,” says Lauren Brigham, who will receive a Bachelor of Science degree in Business Administration. “In doing so, I can move forward in my career and improve both myself and my family. I am greatly indebted to the Foundation for all that they have done. It is extremely important for me to accomplish my higher education goals. I am aspiring to become an attorney and have a successful career. Education is the key to accomplishing my life goals.”

Strong values, work ethic equal success

STORY BY DEBORAH HIGGINS ’09

JoAnn Speicher’s introduction to collegiate life at Misericordia began with a “cold shoulder” from most of the sophomores during her freshman year. In 1962, Misericordia was an all-girls school. What she didn’t know is that the sophomores were just following tradition. It didn’t take long until that experience was replaced by “Sophomore Friends,” a special bond that exists to this day, she says. The memories, life lessons and friendships that Speicher and her extended family forged on campus remain dear to each of them today. Thanks to Misericordia, Speicher says her life and her work have been both rewarding and fulfilling because the college helped her to reinforce several important core values. That’s why Speicher and her husband, Tim, support Misericordia through generous donations so others can benefit from the University’s challenging academics and tenets of mercy, service, justice and hospitality.

Misericordia will name a computer lab in the new academic center, Insalaco Hall, in honor of the Speichers’ generous support.

For Speicher, Misericordia’s rigorous academics provided the foundation for her life’s work. Today, the Speichers own a successful exporting company that benefited from her education. “My background was in math and science,” she says. “I knew nothing about business. But the teachers and staff at Misericordia helped me tremendously.”

While still a student at Misericordia, she took a work study position in the dean’s office. “Everything I learned about office etiquette and protocol I learned from Margaret Houlihan who was secretary to Dean Sister Marianna Gildea,” she says. The relationships she made during her years on campus “were the ones that made me a better person,” she adds.

Years later, the Speichers founded T-R Associates, Inc., an exporting business, that led to The Northeastern Pennsylvania Business Journal naming her one of the Best and Brightest Women in Pennsylvania. This alumna believes in a strong work ethic, in loyalty to her alma mater and in supporting other students who welcome the opportunity to succeed.

“I think it’s important to keep talent in our area and one way to do that is to financially support our scholars. A scholarship is what made my education possible,” she says.
Nursing students, faculty volunteer during spring break to educate and study alongside Guyanese students and health care providers, while providing personal care at mobile medical clinics for the underserved in Guyana

Misericordia service engages students

From Northeastern Pennsylvania to Peru, Louisiana and Texas, Misericordia University shares the time and talents of its students, faculty and staff so they are engaged in the betterment of communities, neighborhoods and the world.

During March’s spring break, 35 members of the Misericordia campus community did service work in Slidell, Louisiana and Laredo, Texas, a border town near Mexico. MU volunteers worked in a children’s orphanage and volunteered in a domestic violence shelter in Mexico during an immigration experience in Laredo. They also participated in more Hurricane Katrina clean-up efforts and worked on three homes through Habitat for Humanity during the service trip to Slidell.

Misericordia’s volunteer efforts benefit the underserved. The Campus Ministry service trips to Louisiana and Texas introduced students to new cultures and people, while also allowing them to experience real-world issues such as homelessness, immigration and poverty in new settings.

Kathleen Gelso, Visiting Assistant Professor of Nursing; Christine Somers, Director of Campus Ministry; and Rev. Donald Williams, Campus Chaplain; chaperoned students Brian Glowatski, Kristen Fry, Brittainy Adair, Jackie Rickus, Stacy Osenbruck, Erin Huppmann, Marianne Guarnieri, Tonya Kellerman, Ellen Wingert and Amanda Ollivier to Texas.

Lynn Aldrich, Associate Professor of Physics; Patrick McKamy, Coordinator of Student Activities; and Dan Kimbrough, Visiting Assistant Professor of Communications; chaperoned the Louisiana service trip for students Alecia Merrick, Alyson Neely, Alyssa Kunte, Amanda Howatt, Andrea Moon, Branne Finagan, Daniell Cino, Jason Copeland, Jill Rafferty, Juliann Curry, Lindsay Buss, Lisa Witkoski, Shannon Kane, Megan McClary, Sam Sheets, Stephanie Pelligrino, Tanya Lang, Veronica Nelson and Kate Farrigan.

Misericordia’s service also will touch the people of Peru from May 18-28. Volunteers will travel to Lima and Chimbote to work in ministries, hospices, schools and also assist the Sisters of Mercy’s educational initiative to promote an understanding of the relationship of clean water and adequate sanitation to health.

St. Joseph’s Hospital in Georgetown, Guyana is like any hospital setting in Northeastern Pennsylvania: A dedicated team of nurses, doctors and other health care providers work diligently in tandem to care and cure patients.

The physical setting, though, is unlike any hospital in the United States: A medical-surgical ward is crammed into one large room where health care workers battle stifling heat and humidity, as well as the lack of proper medical supplies while conducting their daily rounds.

“We survived our first day,” Erin Colby, a nursing student, acknowledged in a daily blog while in Guyana. “This was an eye-opener like no other. What I had envisioned as a hospital was not what we encountered. I was amazed at the diligence of the nurses, students and aides carrying out their duties.

“How fortunate we are as Americans where we take air conditioning for granted and feel that the health care we receive is a fundamental right. It was an unforgettable experience to be able to work alongside other nursing students. Conversation between students living worlds apart was intriguing as we all learned from one another — Misericordia students learning about a foreign culture and how to improvise, and Guaynesan students observing techniques and methods practiced in the states.”

As part of the international service-learning course, Global Health Issues in the Developing World, 10 members of the Misericordia University Nursing alumnus gives back to MU: Larry Shotwell ’03 outlines his career as a nurse anesthetist.

Nursing Program spent Feb. 27 to March 6 in Guyana instructing, learning and practicing medicine alongside their South American counterparts.

“Providing students with an opportunity to do service learning in a developing country was extremely rewarding,” said Brenda Hage, Ph.D., C.R.N.P., Director of Graduate Nursing Programs. “Even though this was my sixth trip to Guyana, I am still struck by how meaningful students continue to find the experience.”

The naturally challenging environment introduced Misericordia students to new opportunities. By embracing the new culture and demanding working conditions, eight nursing students applied their classroom and clinical skills and learned how to react to difficult circumstances that can develop without notice in any hospital or clinical setting.

“The (Guyanese) students and staff are very willing to share their culture and we enjoyed working with them,” said nursing student Deborah Morris.

“The opportunity to experience firsthand the medical practices of a developing country is priceless. There are people there who are working to help make improvements, but there are still problems. There is garbage thrown all over the streets and standing water is everywhere.”

To temporarily alleviate supply shortages, students and faculty members, Cynthia Mailloux, R.N., Ph.D., nursing department chair, and Dr. Hage, collected and delivered medical supplies, medications, stethoscopes, academic books, tympanic thermometers and pulse oximeters to St. Joseph’s Mercy Hospital.

“The students were empathetic to the lack of technology and supplies that we are so privileged to have in this country,” said Dr. Mailloux. “Some (students) cried and others embraced patients as they cared for them during their days in Guyana.”

At St. Joseph’s Mercy Hospital School of Nursing, Dr. Hage and graduate students, Barbara Campagna and Angela Evans, provided modern classroom instruction.

“Both of our graduate students did a wonderful job and the students were so respectful to us,” Dr. Hage said. “They participated and were enthusiastic about the content being covered.”

The students gained a sense of responsibility and a belief that people cannot be in the world because of a sense of responsibility and a belief that Jamaica with Campus Ministry group of volunteers travels to out in many ways. Each January, a

Students, faculty and staff reach out in many ways. Each January, a group of volunteers travels to Jamaica with Campus Ministry because of a sense of responsibility and a belief that people cannot be in the world without also being of the world. Ten students — Maura Musial, Brian Glowatski, Jackie Rickus, Alyson Neely, Alyssa Scavone, Nicole Moore, Tom Glowatski, Jessica Vozzella, Samantha Sheets and Monica Winshel — joined chaperones Virginia Conrad, Assistant Director of Alumni, Community and Donor Relations; Christine Somers, Director of Campus Ministry, and Campus Chaplain, Rev. Donald J. Williams in Jamaica from Jan. 3-10.

Volunteers stayed with Father Patrick Mwangi of St. Joseph’s Catholic Church in Manchester and painted the church. At the Missionaries of Charity Home for the Elderly, students visited and worked with residents who have been abandoned by their families. School-aged children at St. Joseph’s Primary School benefitted from Misericordia instruction and playtime, and students spent a day at Mustard Seed, a home for disabled young people and children with HIV.

The service trip is part of the service-learning course, Theology of the Church. MU students routinely participate in national and international service opportunities where they get to apply their classroom and clinical lessons for the betterment of others.

Planning For Macedonia

Students study alongside MU’s Fulbright Scholar while he teaches economics and entrepreneurship in European country.
All that stands between Julianne and Jennifer Oliver’s dream is about 270 miles and a cure for breast cancer.

The Flyte & Moore Walk Across Pennsylvania that begins June 2 is more than a fundraiser for the Northeastern Pennsylvania branch of the Susan G. Komen for the Cure. It’s an effort by two members of the class of 2009 to offer tangible help to women who are battling the disease and to honor their maternal grandmother who died from it before they were born.

The twin sisters hope to raise $100,000 through sponsorships by walking from Pittsburgh to Pittston from June 2-15 in honor of their grandmother, Evelyn Flyte, and Aunt Dorothy Moore, who successfully beat the disease twice. Sadly, Flyte died in 1983 after a 10-year battle with cancer, but a lot of her characteristics and spirit survive through the Oliver sisters.

“For as long as I can remember, my family has told us how much we remind them of our grandmother,” says Julianne, who will graduate from Misericordia on May 16 with a degree in philosophy and pre-law and a minor in psychology. “My grandmother never backed down from anything and that is what we share with her. So in the summer we will walk because we can’t simply walk away.”

The feisty and gregarious nature they share with their grandmother surely helped when they learned their newly married 25-year-old cousin had a double mastectomy three months after getting married in 2007. “Wow, she’s 25!” says Julianne, recalling the conversation she had with her sister in downtown Scranton. “It runs in our family. We are young, but we can’t be in denial any longer: There’s a possibility we can get it.”

“So Jen said, ‘Let’s do something about it.’”

Initially, the ambitious college seniors discussed walking across the country to raise money and awareness. But after a swift reality check, later that day they decided to make their goal a little more manageable. A few months later the regional Komen for the Cure branch helped them begin organizing the event.

First, they registered as a non-profit organization with Pennsylvania and opened a bank account before finalizing the name and route of the event. An innocuous question by a representative of the foundation, though, proved to the girls how much the walk means to them personally.

“When we first started this, the affiliate told me I would have to make a decision on how the money’s dispersed,” says Julianne, 21. “I wanted all of it to go to research, but they asked me to sleep on it.”

Five days later, Julianne and Jennifer decided 75 percent of the funding will benefit underinsured women so they can seek treatment and annual mammograms, and the remaining money will go to find a cure. “I went through such emotional turmoil,” Julianne adds. “I want to find a cure, but I started thinking if my grandmother had the financial means to fight the disease she might still be here.”

One year later, the sisters took their plan public. They’ve gone door-to-door soliciting donations from businesses and households during weekends and breaks from school. They organized Pink Week at Coughlin and Montrose high schools in Northeastern Pennsylvania where students formed human ribbons to raise money and awareness. Pink bracelets and T-shirts also were sold at the school events to raise money.

Sandy Insalaco’s dedication to Misericordia is not hard to spot. The names of him and wife Marlene adorn the start-of-the-art Insalaco Hall. A member of Misericordia’s Board of Trustees for more than a decade, he has led and been a major contributor to significant fundraising for the University, and established the Insalaco Center for Career Development. As a longtime, successful entrepreneur, Insalaco knows a good investment when he sees one.

"Frankly, I was quite convinced that contributing to Misericordia was money that was an investment rather than a donation," he explains. "They are the finest stewards of money you can find."

He notes that the strengths of Misericordia can be leveraged to support and improve the surrounding community, particularly in health science fields.

"Misericordia is very strong in health sciences, and when you look at our area, we have an aging community," he says. "You need to train people to serve the needs of the community. We have the support staff for those doctors, and I think that will bode well for the future of health care in our area."

After operating with his brothers 14 supermarkets in Northeast Pennsylvania for nearly 40 years, Insalaco sold the chain in 1993 and has gone on to lead water bottler Nature’s Way, a business that has grown during his eight-year tenure thanks in large part to a commitment to new technology. Leaving the supermarket chain behind, however, also gave Insalaco the opportunity to give back to the community even more, something the Insalacos sought to instill in their corporate culture over four decades.

He joined the Misericordia Board of Trustees in 1998, at the behest of the late Monsignor Andrew McGowan. Finding an institution that shared his values gave Insalaco the impetus to become a university benefactor as well.

"At Misericordia, I found a family-oriented place with good core values in the things that I believe in," Insalaco says. "I never expected any building to be named after me. With Dr. MacDowell, the administration, the board and everyone involved, when you see the progress that’s been made, it’s unparalleled. It’s phenomenal. I look at where they were when I first joined the board, it’s really just been taken to the next level."

And Insalaco is excited about where Misericordia still can go. He says the quality of education and values of the university will help Misericordia grow further as it attracts more and more students.

"Misericordia can and will expand its radius for students. I think we’ll attract students from a broader area than we historically have," he says. "When potential students see the quality of education, and how as one of our former board chairs, Lou Alesi, said, ‘we take good people and make them better,’ that is so important in this day and age."
Karen Boback ‘73, Ph.D., transitions smoothly from educator to legislator

A Natural Fit

After spending her career in education, the Misericordia alumna and adjunct professor is now in her second term as state representative for the 117th District. A philosophy imparted to Boback early in life that she carried throughout her career guided her in that transition.

"It was my dad who instilled in me the philosophy that I had no right to sit back and complain about anything unless I was willing to stand up and do something about it … This philosophy has always governed my life and provided the perfect transition for my retirement from the educational profession to the political arena."

Boback spent more than 30 years as a teacher in the Tunkhannock Area School District after earning her B.S. in elementary education from Misericordia. She earned advanced degrees at other institutions, including her doctorate from Penn, before returning to Misericordia to earn another master’s in education with a concentration on technology. The Harveys Lake resident also has been a faculty member at Misericordia, most recently as professor-in-charge of the undergraduate Language Arts Methods.

Her devotion to the University started early.

"Misericordia helped shape me professionally," Boback said. "At Misericordia, I had the opportunity to work with a dedicated, highly skilled faculty that encouraged and promoted my talents. The small class size allowed, and still allows, for personalized attention which builds confidence and promotes success. The programs offered by the University have always been renowned in professional circles. That is why I chose it as a student, and promoted it as an adjunct faculty member. Without question, the caliber of education I received at Misericordia set the stage for my educational and professional accomplishments."

Serving the community is an integral part of Boback’s life, and what she learned of activism from her mother was reinforced during her time at Misericordia. She noted that the charisms of the Sisters of Mercy that she saw in practice as a student when Misericordia opened its doors to the victims of the Agnes flood are alive and well at the University today.

Through all her achievements, for Boback, Misericordia will always be home. "When I’m at Misericordia, I always feel like I’m home," she said. "It is and always has been an institution that reached out into the community."
She joined the Montessori School in Wilmington, Del., in 1968 and was appointed Head of School in 1980. As its director, she led the school’s growth from 14 students when she started to 350 when she retired 20 years later. She served as president of the board of directors of the American Montessori Society (AMS), later taking the reins as the agency's interim executive director. She had the honor of representing AMS at the United Nations in briefings on world poverty and issues directly related to children. Her lifetime of dedication to the Montessori tradition of teaching has influenced the lives of thousands of children and adult learners across the country and around the world.

The American Montessori Society recognized the years of service and dedication Marie Lipo Dugan ’55, Biology, provided to the institution by presenting her with the 2009 Living Legacy Award. The society’s top award was presented at the AMS annual conference in New Orleans, La., in February. She was also recognized by the Wilmington Montessori School she founded with a reception featuring U.S. Sen. Tom Carper in January.

“In my life, I feel like I am making a difference,” Dugan says. “I can honestly say that the turning point in my life was my experience at Misericordia.”

Dugan says her father immigrated to the United States, settled in Swoyersville, Pa., and wanted his family to be educated. Science-oriented in high school, she enrolled at Misericordia on a full scholarship as a day student in biology, traveling to the campus by car or bus. Her days as a member of the Misericordia Science Club are documented with a photograph that today hangs in the Mary Kintz Bevevino Library. Not only did she meet her husband, George Dugan, a student at King’s College, at a Misericordia social, but she also found inspiration in the Teacher Education Program. It was the beginning of her doing work for the good of the public. She graduated in 1955 with a bachelor’s degree in biology.

“The Mercy nuns were very inspiring to me, and had a lot to do with who I am today,” she adds. “I learned from them, and my mother, Mary Nycz Lipo, the importance of service work and giving of myself. It isn’t until time passes that you realize just how important those experiences are on your life.”

Among the many awards she has received, Misericordia honored Dugan in 2005 with the Alumnae Association Medallion Award, presented during Alumni Weekend festivities. The award is given in recognition of anniversary class members who have demonstrated outstanding community service, commitment to the strengthening of family life, and distinguished professional contributions.

Currently, Dugan is co-coordinator of the AMS Course for Montessori School Management (CMSM) at the College of New Rochelle, in New Rochelle, N.Y., and reports she feels at “home,” teaching and consulting with excellent Montessori public and independent schools all over the country. She and George live in Wilmington and have one son, two daughters and two grandsons.
Alumnus ready to assume command of USS Boxer that patrols Pacific Ocean near the Iraqi war zone

Service
To God & Country

Capt. Frank J. Michael

Frank J. Michael ’86 has seen the good and the bad the world has to offer. The career Naval officer has experienced the turbulence of the Middle East, the scenic beauty of Africa and exotic cultures of the Orient in Singapore, Hong Kong and Indonesia. Through it all, though, two constants have remained in his life: family and service.

Countless miles and seven deployments later, Captain Michael finds himself second in command aboard the Wasp class amphibious assault ship, USS Boxer (LHD 4), in the Pacific Ocean engaged in maritime security operations in the fifth and seventh fleet area of responsibility. “We are prepared to go anywhere at anytime and carry out the mission assigned,” the executive officer relays in a Feb. 24th e-mail.

The Pacific Ocean is half a world away from his hometown of Dallas Borough, and seemingly a stratosphere from where his journey began at Misericordia University. The son of Frank J. Michael Jr. and Patricia A. “Polly” Michael received his Bachelor of Science degree in nursing at MU. The rigorous academic structure of the Nursing Department, his family’s history of serving others, and the popular Top Gun movie helped steer him to Aviation Office Candidate School — and national service. “The sense of service was something instilled from childhood,” the former Dallas Fire and Ambulance volunteer says proudly. “Something I still admire very much in my parents is their selfless service to their family and to their community. The sense of service was certainly strengthened through my experience in the nursing curriculum. I recall vividly the sense of worth and satisfaction in working with the disadvantaged and those in need.”

Captain Michael earned his “Wings of Gold” in 1988 from flight school and joined a helicopter squadron in Norfolk, Va. He flew the now-retired SH-2F Seaprite that was used to perform a range of operations from anti-submarine warfare to anti-surface combat.

Following his initial squadron experience, Captain Michael served for three years as a flight instructor at a training squadron in Pensacola, Fla. He was then assigned to USS Guam (LPH 9) stationed in Norfolk and subsequently reassigned to San Diego, Calif. Following his service as flag aide to Commander, Naval Air Forces, headquartered at Naval Air Station North Island, he was selected for command.

His first command was Helicopter Anti-Submarine Squadron Light FOUR SEVEN, stationed at North Island. During that tour, he embarked on the carrier USS Abraham Lincoln and responded to Indonesia in the wake of the deadly tsunami. Soon after returning from his deployment in Asia, he took a squadron to New Orleans for search and rescue operations in the wake of Hurricane Katrina.

At the Pentagon, Captain Michael served on the Operations Directorate of the Joint Staff and shortly thereafter, received his present assignment for major command aboard USS Boxer.

Through his tours of duty, Captain Michael says he has drawn upon his background to complete his mission and lead the men and women under his command.

“The discipline of the curriculum at Misericordia set me up for success,” says Captain Michael, who also holds a Master’s Degree in Public Administration from the University of West Florida. “It was well-balanced and required a good deal of personal initiative to compete. The academic discipline I learned at Misericordia prepared me well for the rigors of flight training, leading an aircrew in operations and leading a squadron during contingency.”

Eleven months from now, he will become USS Boxer’s Commanding Officer. In mid-April, the Boxer hosted U.S. cargo ship Captain Richard Phillips shortly after he was rescued from Somali pirates.
A Life of Service

A life of service that has been dedicated to others grew from a seed planted at Misericordia University. For Mary Louise Zurenda Austin (who goes by Mary Lou), her years as a student during the 1960s were filled with hard work in the classroom and a yearning desire to reach out to help those in need. Her idealism was nurtured by the Religious Sisters of Mercy at Misericordia that guided the young woman from West Pittston toward her life’s work.

“When I was a student, I really had no idea at the time that Misericordia’s legacy of mercy and service would transform into a mission for my life. It all began there and before I knew it, that mission had taken me around the world,” Austin explains.

Before graduating in 1965 with an education degree, Austin served an internship in the late Congressman Daniel J. Flood’s office where she continued to learn about client service, loyalty, patriotism, hospitality, and mercy. “Congressman Flood was very big into support for our veterans. He always said we owe much to our veterans who do so much for us. I never forgot that,” she remembers.

After graduation, Austin accepted a teaching position at an elementary school in Maryland. An opportunity to become part of the United Service Organizations (USO), presented itself shortly thereafter and she took the chance.

“I was familiar with the National Catholic Community Service (NCCS), one of the founding organizations of the USO, but I had no idea of the extent of their mission. Accepting a position with NCCS lead me to a life of service and adventure,” she says.

Austin met her husband, Richard, while she was working with her job overseas. As the years went by, she continued to travel and serve the country’s military forces through her work with the USO. She has held various positions stateside as well as overseas and currently serves as the President and Chief Executive Officer of USO of Georgia, Inc., where she guides 2,200 volunteers in addition to fundraising, organizing and planning efforts.

Her lifetime of service to others has been recognized by many people and organizations. Misericordia University presented her the Mother Mary Catharine McGann Alumni Achievement Award in 2002 for distinguished and sustained career accomplishments. Humbled by the numerous accolades and honors for her work, Austin is quick to acknowledge that the work of the USO cannot be accomplished without an army of dedicated volunteers.

“I’m just the orchestra leader,” she says. “It’s not just me who makes the USO work, it’s the volunteers. I am awed by all the work they do. I receive my greatest reward when one of our service members comes up to me and says thank you for what you’re doing. It’s a very, very moving experience.”
Kerri Miglionico changed her mind in the summer of 1999. Just before her senior year at Misericordia, Kerri chose to leave the Physical Therapy program. “I finally decided to honor that whispering voice I had been hearing telling me that this was not the career I really wanted,” she offered during an interview in Chicago, Ill. “I settled on public relations after researching careers in the business field. I took a part-time internship in Misericordia’s college relations office and they helped me get hands-on media relations training.” She graduated with a degree in General Studies and went on to get her M.A. in public relations at the University of Florida.

Today, Kerri Miglionico-Phipps works in the windy city at Ketchum, one of the top global agencies for public relations. She is responsible for reputation management at companies ranging from an organic and natural food and beverage manufacturer to a private equity firm, to several nonprofit organizations. “While the hours may be long and many months or even years can pass before you actually complete a project, I can’t imagine doing anything else,” Kerri reflects. “Every client is unique and every day is different.”

When Kerri picked Misericordia’s Professor Emeritus Don Fries to be her new advisor in 1999, it was because she liked him from her freshman Western Civilization classes and felt confident he would offer sound advice. “What I didn’t know,” Kerri recalls, “was that his daughter was a successful executive at Ketchum in New York. I remember he spoke highly of the firm, so I applied there after graduate school. In a strange twist, I ended up working for none other than Dr. Fries’ daughter, Kiersten Zweibaum. It was such a pleasant surprise and a great start to my career at a public relations agency. And I’ve been with Ketchum ever since.”

Misericordia’s core curriculum courses have served Kerri well in her profession. “The broader knowledge base,” Kerri says, “makes you a well-rounded professional in any field. While some of my classmates despised having to take art history or literature because they felt it had no relevance to their anticipated careers, these classes were my favorites. The liberal arts core curriculum at Misericordia without question prepared me for the career I have today.”

While Kerri grew up in Pittston, the public relations career she ultimately chose has taken her all over the country on business, as well as to Russia and Europe. Perhaps, Kerri suggests, “Dr. Seuss might have written, ‘Oh, The Places You’ll Go!’ with the public relations career field in mind!”

But the best part of her job, she says, is building relationships with clients. “There’s nothing better than getting to know them, learning about what they’d like to accomplish and what challenges they face, anticipating their needs and helping them look like rock stars within their respective companies. Maintaining a great client relationship is one of the hardest, but most rewarding aspects of my job.”

Ten years later, she still remains close to several of her MU classmates. At the end of an early morning coffee meeting and before she left for another work day, Kerri recalled that her Misericordia professors and many administrators knew her by name and took an active interest in her education. “I think about the close-knit community and how just about everyone was genuinely kind. Everyone’s college experience is different, but Misericordia taught me to be supportive, inclusive and, above else, empathetic.”

The Pennsylvania Newspaper Association (PNA) awarded Misericordia University’s student newspaper, The Highlander, a second place in the Keystone Press Awards. The Highlander was recognized in the Ongoing News category for the newspaper staff’s coverage last spring of Misericordia University’s first Health Care Summit. LaSalle University’s student newspaper earned first place and Temple University received an honorable mention in the same category. Student editors Amanda Janiga, Mallory Vough, Rachel Decker and Jennifer Gomez attended the annual PNA conference in April to receive the award. Melissa Sgroi, assistant professor, is the faculty advisor for The Highlander.
Sophomore occupational therapy major co-authors research in national publication

For the DiGiovannis, choosing a profession in health care truly is a family tradition.

Today, Nicole DiGiovanni ‘12 is a sophomore occupational therapy major at Misericordia University thanks largely to the unique experiences she had at Shriners Hospital for Children in Philadelphia during her impressionable years in high school.

“I like helping people and I knew I was going to go into health care, but I wanted to do something different so I chose occupational therapy,” the daughter of Teresa Beck and Steve DiGiovanni explains. “There’s a more personal level to OT.”

The family’s affiliation with health care began with DiGiovanni’s grandmother, who was a nurse. It continues today through her mother, a nurse at Shriners Hospital, her two aunts, older sister and a cousin who are all nurses, and three additional cousins who presently are enrolled in nursing schools.

The job shadowing DiGiovanni conducted with her mother as a teenager eventually led to work as a research aid during her senior year in high school and freshman year in college. The work led to her co-authoring the research paper, “Children’s and Parents’ Perspectives about Activity Performance and Participation following Spinal Cord Injury,” with M.J. Mulcahey, Ph.D., OTR/L, Director of Rehabilitation Services and Clinical Research at Shriners Hospital. The American Journal of Occupational Therapy accepted the paper for publication.

As a research assistant, DiGiovanni sorted through mounds of files that contained information from interviews that were conducted with parents and their children who had become quadriplegic or paraplegic due to accidents. She searched for common themes about life independence and accessibility in the research files.

Overall, 33 children and 13 primary caregivers participated in cognitive testing interviews to evaluate the wording and clarity of items and response scales designed to evaluate activity performance and participation by children with spinal cord injuries. The goal of the research is to develop the CAT or computer adaptive testing model that customizes questions about accessibility and life functions based on the subject’s physical ability.

The research opportunity and job shadowing at the hospital also enabled DiGiovanni professional experiences that not many undergraduate students get to realize at this stage of their education. The touching statements that she read and researched at the hospital also proved to her that she chose the right career path.

Students leave their hearts in Jamaica

After spending a week in Jamaica, we honestly say we are changed. We left for a week in Jamaica on January 3, embarking on this journey with our Theology of the Church class. Out of 10 students, four of us were occupational therapy majors (Nicole Moore, Maura Musial, Alysa Scavone, and Monica Winshel). We stayed with Father Patrick Mwangi of Kenya at the compound of St. Joseph’s Catholic Church.

This was an experience to remember, as we had the opportunity to participate in many service activities. Our favorite was volunteering at Mustard Seed Orphanage where we helped feed children with special needs and played with children who were HIV positive. The children were so grateful and the experience allowed us to use some of the skills we are learning in our occupational therapy classes. The next day we went to St. Joseph’s Basic School and had the opportunity to interact with children and learn Jamaican games, songs and dances! We also had the chance to meet members of the community who taught us so much about their culture.

It was very hard to leave Jamaica and the newly formed friendships. However, the people in Jamaica will always hold a place in our hearts and we can only hope we made a difference in their lives. They touched us in many ways because they are a selfless, welcoming people.

Goalie scores with pro-hockey internship

STORY BY MARIANNE TUCKER PUHALLA

Ellen Howanitz ’09, poses with Brahm’s goalie, David Cacciola.

Senior sport management major and Cougar field hockey goalie Ellen Howanitz ’09 is getting what she was promised. In only the first month, her paid internship with the Texas Brahm’s professional ice hockey team near Dallas, Texas, provided her with hands-on experience in the business office, ticketing, community relations, game-day activities and direct sales. It is just what she wanted.

As a sport management major, with minors in accounting and marketing, she was hoping for an internship that covered lots of bases. When she attended a sports job fair, while visiting an aunt in Plano, Texas, Scott Plourde, director of sales for the Brahm’s of the Central Hockey League promised her just that. “He told me I would get more experience with a team such as the Brahm’s which has a smaller staff. He was right. I am really happy to be getting sales and business management training, since most starting jobs in this business are in ticket sales.” An added bonus has been the chance to help with community relations. “In my third week on the job, I took two players to an appearance at an elementary school in downtown Fort Worth, many of them special needs students. It was great getting to see the kids faces light up. It has convinced me even more that I love this career.”

No stranger to the rigors of life as an athlete, Howanitz was a star field hockey goalie during her high school years at Northwest Area in her hometown of Shickshinny, Pa., and earned plenty of accolades when her career took her to Misericordia. As an award-winning goalie for four years with the Cougars, she recorded a 29-18 win-loss record, 3,278 minutes played, and 308 saves, for a 78.4 percent saves average. She led the league with saves her senior year earning her MAC Freedom Conference Defensive Player of the Week honors and her team’s coveted MVP award.

Reporting that she feels well prepared on the job by her Misericordia education, Howanitz says that among the classes that have served her best is the sports economics class of Tom Sweetz. “The concepts and theories we went over, such as supply and demand, and examining the economic benefits of an arena to an area, are things that I often hear being discussed by the Brahm’s general manager and others in the front office.”

STORY BY MARIANNE TUCKER PUHALLA

Misericordia University sophomore Kristina Hrabcak has years of modeling experience to thank for her appearance in the Miss Pennsylvania USA 2009 pageant that was held in November in Pittsburgh, Pa. Competing against 60 girls from across the state, Hrabcak represented Northeastern Pennsylvania in the preliminary pageant for the Miss USA title. The former Miss Luzerne County 2006 is a Dallas High School graduate who is majoring in business. A model since she was a young girl, Hrabcak appeared as an extra in the Nickelodeon network musical comedy, “The Naked Brothers Band,” a hit teen movie released in 2007.

In her first major pageant, Hrabcak chose dystonia as her platform. Dystonia is an acquired movement disorder that causes the muscles of the body to contract involuntarily. She hopes raising awareness will lead to a cure for the 300,000 Americans who are afflicted.

Hrabcak says she loves modeling and hopes to return to the runway in New York someday.
Dreams come true with Disney wedding

STORY BY MARIANNE TUCKER PUHALLA

Even a lifetime of performing on stage didn’t prepare Shannon Peduto Hernandez ’03 for the thrill of a lifetime—exchanging wedding vows at Walt Disney World in Florida. Flanked by Minnie and Mickey Mouse, Shannon and her groom, Eric Hernandez, said their “I do’s” in front of 60 invited guests and waltzed during their first dance to, So This Is Love, from the Disney movie, Cinderella. They were later whisked off to their quarters in Cinderella’s horse-drawn coach.

A dancer with the group since she was a young girl, Hernandez is a co-owner and instructor for the Emerald Isle Step Dancers, and says even when she and her students performed at Disney World, she never imagined how magical a wedding there would be. The ceremony came complete with rings carried in on a glass slipper by a costumed footman.

The couple met as high school students at Bishop Hoban High School in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and had their first official date in 1998. It was at midnight on New Year’s Eve in 2005, while on a vacation to Disney World, that he popped the question in front of Cinderella’s Castle.

Hernandez earned her bachelor’s degree in education from Misericordia, and was in the Education Club and inducted into the Kappa Delta Pi Honor Society. She says her experiences at MU fostered her desire to help people.

In addition to the dance group, she is the Victim Witness Coordinator for the Luzerne County District Attorney’s Office where she helps victims of all ages as they go through the justice system. Eric is the chief information officer for LWR Time, Ltd., an American distributor of premium watches.

The couple resides in Mountain Top, Pa.

STORY BY MARIANNE TUCKER PUHALLA

Bringing the textbook to life with a computer filled with real-life photographs of rare surgical procedures, Larry Shotwell CRNA MSN ’03 made an immediate impression on the students in Visiting Assistant Professor Kathleen Gelso’s medical/surgical class.

Shotwell ’03, an MU nursing graduate, is a nurse anesthetist at Geisinger Wyoming Valley Medical Center in Wilkes-Barre, Pa. He served as a guest lecturer in the spring for a three-hour interoperative procedures lecture. As the students watched the images, Shotwell shared his first-hand knowledge of the importance of a nurse’s role in the operating room.

Shotwell met his future wife, education major Renee Capozucca ’99, through a mutual friend while both were commuter students at Misericordia. Shotwell was a non-traditional student after spending seven years working for United Parcel Service. He earned his bachelor’s degree in nursing and completed his MSN and certificate in Nurse Anesthesia at the Wyoming Valley Health Care System/University of Scranton School of Nurse Anesthesia. He credits the independent clinical he did in the Wyoming Valley Health Care System’s ICU during his senior year at Misericordia for giving him the experience and motivation he needed to attend anesthesia school.

As a nurse anesthetist, he administers anesthesia to patients in the operating room and is responsible for monitoring their vital signs and adjusting treatment as needed throughout their procedure.
Tucked discreetly between the pages of X-Men, Green Lantern and other comic book adventure stories are themes that delve into more than extraordinary feats of strength or superhuman powers. Oftentimes, socially relevant messages of the time are delivered to readers of all ages, albeit, in an untraditional often unintended fashion.

The environmental, racial and political issues of yesterday and today are brought to life colorfully and creatively through the popular medium that has stood the test of time for more than 60 years. Comic books and graphic novels do more than create a fantasy world where good simply conquers evil through the superheroes created by companies like DC Comics and Marvel Comics.

Through the interdisciplinary course, Race and Graphic Narrative in the Postwar United States, students and professors alike at Misericordia University are exploring multiculturalism and other important social issues that are addressed in comic strips, comic books and graphic novels. Allan Austin, Ph.D., Associate Professor of History, and Patrick Hamilton, Ph.D., Assistant Professor of English, designed the English 415/History 320 course by utilizing their common interest and professional backgrounds.

“One day, Patrick came into my office and asked if I’d ever seen the New Guardians,” Dr. Austin recalls. “He showed me a blog that was just horrific.

Out of that, we started saying there’s something to teach here. “We’re both really interested in issues of race, ethnicity and identity, and we’re trying to find ways to draw students in,” adds Dr. Austin, an avid collector and reader of comic books since he was six years old. “It seemed we could use comic books as a medium to discuss how terribly wrong multiculturalism went in 1980s comic books as well as other issues of race since mid-century.”

The new course has been fully rostered for the spring 2008 and 2009 semesters. Coursework includes required readings of La Perdida by Jessica Abel, Citizen 13660 by Miné Okubo, Green Lantern/Green Arrow (Vol. 1) by Dennis O’Neil and Neal Adams, Maus: A Survivor’s Tale (Vol. 1 — My Father Bleeds History) by Art Spiegelman and American Born Chinese by Gene Luen Yang, and writing brief weekly papers, longer essays along with classroom participation.

Each text allows students to view relevant social issues through a different prism. Superman comic strips and Citizen 13660 engages them in Japanese American concentration camps during World War II, for example, and spawns scholarly discussion on the controversial topic. “I was very surprised that ethnocentrism played a role in some of the comics,” says Marissa Miller ’09, an English major who is enrolled presently in the course. “I was aware from reading a few graphic novels on my own that the environment and multiculturalism can be found in this written form, but I was happily surprised to find depth and focus.”

In recent years, comics and graphic novels have been looked at more critically in academia, similar to the way traditional literature is reviewed. Instead of stereotyping the boom!, bam! and splats! of action comics, high school teachers and college professors are using them as a gateway to engage their students in discussion, debate and scholarship.

“We try to get them to look at these with a more critical eye in terms of what sort of ideologies and ideas they are exposing,” says Dr. Hamilton, who began collecting Marvel’s Avengers series as a young child.

“It is vitally important that one never writes off a form of information based on its outside form,” says Miller. “My grandparents were initially very shocked that I was taking a course on comics and graphic novels because they didn’t understand the hidden depth and history behind the works.

“After sharing what I’ve learned with my family and friends, they’ve accepted that I am genuinely learning from a worthy academic course. I firmly believe that if an individual is to grow they must step outside of the confines of a set environment and venture into unknown territory,” she adds.

New Buildings

College of Health Sciences: The University purchased the historic Frontier Communications building at 100 Lake St. in April with plans to convert it into a state-of-the-art facility for the Speech-Language Pathology, Nursing, and Occupational and Physical Therapy Departments.

Monsignor Andrew J. McGowan Student Residence Hall: MU dedicated the facility in August. It features suite-style rooms for 116 students, study rooms, activity areas and an atrium-like lounge.

Pauly House: The 62 Lake St. facility allows the novel Women with Children Program to add four students and up to eight children to the program.

Sandy and Marlene Insalaco Hall: Students and faculty began using the technologically-smart facility in March. It houses the Pauly Friedman Art Gallery, business department, ATRI and classroom and conference space.
Some people can live a lifetime and never truly figure out what they want to do when they grow up. While for others, like Ashley Wolanski ’09, their career paths have been clear to them for years.

The daughter of Paulette and the late Thomas Wolanski graduates with a Bachelor of Science degree in biology May 16 during the 83rd annual Commencement ceremony. In the fall, she will enroll in the Pennsylvania College of Optometry (PCO) at Salus University in Elkins Park, Pa., to fulfill her nearly lifelong dream of becoming an optometrist.

“Becoming an optometrist has been a dream of mine since early childhood,” the former Student Government Association president says. “At the age of four, I was fitted with my first pair of eyeglasses.

“My doctor made me feel special even though I wore glasses,” adds Wolanski, a member of the National Biological Honor Society, Beta Beta Beta. “I began realizing back then that making a difference in people’s lives through providing proper eye care would bring me great satisfaction and joy. I wanted to be Dr. Tanner. What greater gift is there than helping someone to see more clearly?”

Wolanski has remained true to her professional dream by being a pre-optometry major at Misericordia and working as a technician at Eye Care Specialists in Kingston. “I only applied to (undergraduate) schools I knew had strong biology programs,” says Wolanski, who was one of more than 900 applicants for the 150-member freshman class at PCO.

“My major definitely helped me prepare for my admission’s test. The one-on-one with the faculty has always been a key.”

The pre-optometry curriculum at Misericordia University is challenging and requires long hours of study and dedication in order to succeed. That strong internal drive that is evident in Wolanski’s academic prowess has also helped propel her to 10 gold medals in competitive figure skating in singles and pairs competition in the Keystone State Games and at Penn State University.

“I definitely get my work ethic from my mom and her belief in me,” says Wolanski, who skates with Justin Carder in pairs competition. “I can say I want to be an astronaut and she will support me and say that I can do it. She’s always taught me that everyone is equal, no matter what race, gender or economic status. I believe that is an important value in order to succeed in society today.”

Misericordia University prides itself on educating the entire person through challenging academics and initiatives like internships, club activities and service work because learning begins from day one at MU. Wolanski’s tenure as SGA president is going to leave a positive impression on campus, but it has also opened up a new world of opportunity for her.

“It’s helped me succeed in becoming more confident and helping me realize that things can change,” says Wolanski, who has been a guest speaker at Convocation, and Cabinet and Board of Trustee meetings. “You just have to put your mind into it and be willing to put in the time and the effort.”

In four years, Wolanski envisions being a pediatric optometrist in a small practice so she can continue to give the same personal attention to her patients that Dr. Tanner provided during her formative years.
Chemistry major eyes career in pharmaceutical research

STORY BY MARIANNE TUCKER PUHALLA

Two months before graduation, senior Jennifer Elward ’09 finds herself in the enviable position of having multiple offers from graduate schools as she pursues her career in pharmaceutical and medical research. Crediting the personal attention she received at Misericordia University, Elward has accepted an offer to attend Temple University to earn her doctorate in physical chemistry and biochemistry in the fall.

The Plains Township, Pa. native says chemistry came easy at Coughlin High School and she has always found it interesting. When selecting a college, the close-knit atmosphere of the MU campus made her feel right at home.

“All the professors, especially Dr. Charles Saladino in biochemistry and Dr. Anna Fedor in physical chemistry, helped guide me through the program and were very accommodating, making sure I was well prepared for graduate school,” she says. “It is a small program, yet that was what helped me form so many great friendships. The science majors all support each other – we are definitely like a family.”

Elward made her mark at MU as president for two years of the Dead Alchemists Society. Continuing in the spirit of mercy and service she found at MU, she plans to enter the pharmaceutical and medical research industry hoping to find better forms of drugs that can work without adverse side effects.

Biology major to pursue medical career at Salus University

STORY BY MARIANNE TUCKER PUHALLA

All it took was a ride-along with an EMT to convince Laura Leighow ’09 that a career in the medical field was in her future. The Misericordia biology major and star Cougar field hockey player is one step closer to her dream after being accepted to Salus University near Philadelphia in the fall to pursue a graduate degree in the physician assistant program.

As a child, family vacations to Acadia National Park often included ranger hikes and gave Leighow the chance to talk one-on-one with experts and develop a love of nature. The idea of majoring in biology in college was solidified as soon as she attended a Misericordia open house and received a tour from Anthony Serino, Ph.D., Associate Professor and Chair of the Biology Department. “I really loved the campus and liked what Dr. Serino had to say about the biology program and the classes it offered,” she recalls. “I’ve had a great experience here and feel completely prepared for graduate school.”

Leighow believes faculty offer plenty of personal attention and not too many undergraduates have the opportunity to take anatomy and physiology, as well as an advanced cadaver anatomy class. She says she would like to thank Drs. Angela Asrivatham, Ph.D., and Barbara McCraith, Ph.D., for their support and guidance as her advisors in the program.

Leighow, the daughter of Michael and Barbara Leighow of Millville, Pa., has worked as a patient companion at Geisinger Medical Center in Danville and hopes to return there as a physician assistant in the areas of trauma or sport medicine.
Earth Hour 2009 highlights year-long green efforts by Cougars for Change

Fueled by the Turn your lights off, turn the Earth on! slogan, Misericordia University’s environmentally-focused student group, Cougars for Change, led the campus in a world-wide initiative to draw attention to responsible energy use and global warming.

Earth Hour 2009 was estimated to have about 1 billion global participants that turned off all non-essential lights for one hour, beginning at 8:30 p.m. on March 28 — a time chosen to coincide with the spring equinox and when the most places on the globe were suitably dark.

According to group member Nicholas DeStefano ’09, an interdisciplinary studies major, Earth Hour began in Sydney, Australia in 2007 as a singular event with 2.2 million participants. The 2008 event involved 400 cities and 50 million people worldwide.

More than 60 countries committed to the 2009 event. “It is amazing to think that this was a project that nearly a billion people around the globe were working on together, and we were able to make Misericordia a part of that community,” DeStefano says.

The Cougars group worked with campus facilities to have all non-essential lights turned off on campus, including an entirely dark Mercy Hall. They engaged alumni support with messages on Cougar Connect, sold T-shirts bearing their slogan and created Facebook social networking pages to engage students, friends and family across the country.

Efforts to make this a community event took them to businesses throughout Dallas borough and township, and to the Dallas Area School District, where they registered hundreds of participants. “The goal of the event is not the energy saved in that one hour, but to make a bold statement for climate change,” DeStefano adds. “If we all work together we have the ability to create awareness and that will lead to change.”

“Electricity is definitely taken for granted by everyone and it’s nice for each of us to play a role in conservation and awareness,” adds fellow Cougars for Change member and Physical Therapy major Caitlin Bryson ’10. “I wanted to be involved because I felt it was important to give back to the community and the world. Misericordia, even though it is small, helped make a difference.”

Kathryn Wallace ’10, Physical Therapy, adds, “Cougars for Change was an opportunity for me to make a change on campus with the help of other motivated students who are not afraid... to speak their minds. Environmental sustainability is a passion of mine and by choosing this topic, and with our Earth Hour, I was able to reach out to the whole campus and community on what I believe is a critical issue."

Cougars for Change hosted an outdoor event during the hour, including an acoustic Open Mic Night featuring music, poetry readings and a performance by the Drama Club. There were also Ultimate (glow-in-the-dark) Frisbee and football games, and a variety of booths set up offering information on ways to go green.

The nine-member committee says Earth Hour 2009 was a successful cap to the Cougars for Change first year. Inspired by the green-friendly and social justice initiatives they witnessed at the Power of One conference they attended in the summer of 2008 in Chicago, Ill., that involved students from Mercy colleges across the country, the students formed Cougars for Change when they returned to campus in August.

"The Mercy Conference was a very inspiring and motivating weekend for all of us," notes Bryson. "After learning about so many social justice issues, each of us knew there was something we could bring back and share with the Misericordia community. As a group, we decided to focus on one issue, environmental sustainability. This was the inspiration that became Cougars for Change."

"I am very proud of the first year that we have had," adds fellow Cougars for Change Kristen Mitchell ’09, a Social Work major. "We have been able to build something from the ground up with great enthusiasm. We have all worked very hard utilizing our resources, pulling in other student groups and organizations and working to energize and enlighten the entire campus community on environmental issues."

The group’s first event was a campus-specific Earth Hour in September, and throughout the year they promoted the reduction of food waste by initiating Trayless Tuesdays in the student dining hall. That on-going project now includes Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, and encourages students to carry only what they think they will eat. It is estimated to have reduced the amount of food waste generated by the campus from 100 to 70 pounds during each lunchtime meal.

Looking back on the year, Megan Baker ’10, Medical Imaging, notes, "The most important thing to me was raising the awareness of going green, and for the most part, our campus has grasped the concept. Our next step is to take more action in making Misericordia green."

The Cougars for Change committee also includes Ashley Ballard ’10, Communications; Zachary Migliori ’10, History; and Elizabeth Show ’10, Psychology.

Students build toy chests for National Day of Service

Misericordia University students enrolled in the Honors Program built six wooden toy chests for the Catherine McAuley Centers in Scranton and Plymouth as part of the National Day of Service on Jan. 19.

Misericordia students, under the supervision of Honors Program director Scott Blanchard, Ph.D., held a six-hour Make-A-Thon to benefit children at the shelters in Luzerne and Lackawanna counties. MU students volunteered for two-hour shifts and utilized woodworking tools to build the chests and electric sanders before finishing them.

I just want to take the time to say that these last three years have been great. I have really enjoyed serving as the Misericordia Alumni Board’s President. However, I am not going anywhere anytime soon. I will still continue to serve on the Alumni Board as long as they will have me.

Winston Churchill said, “We make a living by what we do, but we make a life of what we give.” Several years ago, when I was searching for ways I could volunteer, I had a lot of options. I asked myself, “What am I most passionate about and where would I be able to do my best work?” I was able to answer my own question rather quickly. I wanted to be able to do something for College Misericordia (we were not a University at the time). During my four years as a student, Misericordia unlocked ideas and capabilities in me. I did not think I even had the potential to do anything beyond going to classes and doing what a typical college kid does. However, Misericordia set me up for a good future with solid footing. Since Misericordia gave me that big gift, it even had the potential to do anything beyond going to classes and doing what a typical college kid does.

The four Mercy Charisms of mercy, service, justice, and hospitality are deep-seated in many of Misericordia’s Alumni. They serve in many ways, whether it be for Misericordia University, their church, or volunteer as a coach for a youth baseball or soccer team. If the chance comes along for you to serve, grab it. I know you will find it to be a rewarding opportunity.

Lastly, I want to take the time to thank all members of the Alumni Board. It has been a privilege serving as your President. I want to thank Denise Miscavage, Virginia Conrad and Bob Kaleta for the tireless hours they put in for the Alumni. No task is ever too large for them. I also extend my sincerest congratulations and best wishes to our new Alumni Board President, Helene Flower Reed ’66. Helene, I know you will serve us well and continue to make us Misericordia Proud.

Sophomore Jeff Clark led the Cougars with four MAC titles. He won the 100 and 200 breaststrokes and teamed with Greg Vossler, Robbie Jacobs and Mike Dougherty to win the 200 freestyle relay.

Clark set a pool record in the 100 breaststroke at MAC’s and established a meet record in the same event at the Longneck Invitational at Grove City earlier in the season. Vossler won the 50 freestyle at the MAC’s and joined Mitchell Finch, Clark and Eric Schollmeyer to win the 200 medley relay.

Women’s Basketball

In their first season in the Freedom Conference, the MU women’s basketball team finished 13-12 (8-8 Freedom) and earned a playoff bid.

Though they lost 59-50 to King’s in the first round, the team had much to celebrate coming out of the 2008-09 season. Lacey DeGraw was one of five seniors who closed out their college careers this season. DeGraw finished sixth in rebounding (7.6 RPG) and seventh in scoring (16.2 PPG) in the Freedom Conference and ended her career third in all-time rebounding (741) and fifth in scoring (1,196) at Misericordia.

She was the team MVP and earned second-team All-Freedom honors.

Men’s Basketball

The conclusion of the men’s basketball season signified the end of one of the most successful individual careers in Misericordia history.

Senior forward Vinny Baumunk led MU with 15.8 points and 7.8 rebounds per game and was named team MVP along with being named second-team All-Freedom. Baumunk finished his college career first in school history in career blocks (113), fourth in points (1,455) and fourth in rebounds (639).

The Cougars finished 11-14 overall and 5-11 in the Freedom.

Cheerleading

In true Misericordia fashion, the University’s cheerleaders organized Cougars for a Cure during the final home basketball game to raise money for St. Jude Children’s Research Hospital.

With the help of the MU dance team, a local all-star cheerleading team and the support of MU athletics, the event raised $1,320 to help fight childhood cancer.

Murphy sets NCAA hits mark

Eight hits is a good week for many college baseball players. For Misericordia’s Mike Murphy, eight hits is an NCAA record.

Murphy set a new NCAA Division III single-game record by going 8-for-9 at Polytechnic, March 14. A senior third baseman, he is the second MU baseball player to hold an NCAA D-III single-game record.

Former first baseman Tim Arnold set his mark by keeping his bat on his shoulder - he drew six walks against King’s College in 1995 without swinging at a single pitch. He shares the single-game record with three other players.

The Misericordia University women’s swim team has certainly made their presence known in their brief tenure in the Middle Atlantic Conference.

After finishing second in their initial MAC season a year ago, the Cougars reached the top step of the awards podium by winning the 2008-09 MAC Championship.

Just as they did a year ago, the Cougars put the rest of the conference on notice as Abby Kocoon, Amanda McHugh, Chelsea Mixon and Alicia Bryk opened the meet with a win in the 200 freestyle relay.

Alaina Trent followed that up by winning the 200 individual medley to become Misericordia’s first female individual MAC champion.

Kocoon and Bryk finished 1-2 in the 50 freestyle and Trent, McHugh, Michelle Lacroce and Kocoon capped a spectacular evening by winning the 400 medley relay.

The Cougars picked up where they left off the next night with Trent, McHugh, Lacroce and Bryk claiming the 200 freestyle relay title.

Although they didn’t win another event that night, MU continued to pile up points thanks to their tremendous depth. Lacroce, Crissy Condos and Erin Schneck went 2-3-6 in the 100 butterfly and Kocoon, Jessica Grant and Mixon finished 2-3-5 in the 100 freestyle.

McHugh, Bryk, Jessie Williamson and Katlyn Nelson all reached the finals of the 100 breaststroke and the Cougars had six swimmers score in the event.

They closed out the second day of action with Grant, Mixon, Trent and Kocoon finishing second in the 800 free relay.

Grant, who finished third in the 500 freestyle on opening day, set the tone for the final day with a runner-up finish in the 1650 freestyle. In addition, she clinched MAC Rookie of the Year honors.

After Kocoon and Bryk finished 1-2 in the 100 freestyle, they teamed with McHugh and Trent to put an exclamation point on the event by winning the 400 freestyle relay.

To top it off, Jason Morini was named the MAC Women’s Coach of the Year. “Everything came together for us,” said Morini, who joined his team with a post-meet leap into the pool.

“It wasn’t nearly as easy as we made it look. It was a total team effort as we took advantage of our overall team depth.”
Commonwealth awards $2.5 M for College of Health Sciences

To address the growing need for health care professionals and services locally and nationally, Misericordia University is expanding the College of Health Sciences by purchasing, recycling and converting the former Frontier Communications building into a multi-purpose community and academic resource.

The $6 million fundraising project is being supported by $2.75 million in Pennsylvania Department of Community and Economic Development funding through the offices of Pennsylvania Governor Edward G. Rendell, state Senators Lisa Baker, Raphael Musto and Representative Karen Boback.

“All of us at Misericordia University are delighted that the governor has joined with Senators Baker, Musto and Representative Boback to provide us with this important support,” said Michael A. MacDowell, president. “The purchase and renovation of the former Frontier Communications building represents a true partnership among the public sectors, and state and local government.

“The leadership that our state leaders has provided is clearly the impetus behind this significant accomplishment,” the president added, “but this civic-minded project has also received significant support from the private sector, the Borough of Dallas and Dallas Township as well.”

The three-story, 40,000-square-foot building at 100 Lake Street will house the nursing, speech-language pathology, occupational therapy and physical therapy departments, and allows the university to meet the additional demand for free or low-cost clinics Misericordia currently offers to the community. It will also introduce a collaborative working relationship between the University and the Commonwealth Medical College’s Wilkes-Barre-branch campus.

The purchase also includes the 200-space parking lot and 2,000-square-foot outer building that will become a computer lab for Misericordia students and faculty.

“Misericordia has a national reputation for producing highly qualified health care professionals in multiple fields,” added President MacDowell. “The university is moving the College of Health Sciences to a central location for the community’s convenience, and expanding academic and clinical services at a time when the nation is experiencing a severe shortage of health care professionals, especially nurses.”

More health care professionals graduate from Misericordia University than any other college or university in Northeastern Pennsylvania. The increased opportunities in the expanded College of Health Sciences will allow the institution to increase the number of graduates by 55 percent in five years. These new and superbly educated graduates will help to reduce the shortage of health care professionals and make health care in Pennsylvania more accessible and affordable.

MU is the leader in health science education, offering six bachelor’s-level, four master’s-level and two doctoral-level curricula in nursing, medical imaging, sonography, occupational therapy, physical therapy and speech-language pathology. The University also features strong pre-medicine, pre-optometry and pre-veterinary programs.

Pennsylvania Gov. Rendell promotes his ‘Prescription for PA’ at Misericordia visit

Pennsylvania Governor Edward G. Rendell asked Misericordia students and local legislators to support his Prescription for Pennsylvania health care services plan during a visit to campus Friday, Sept. 26.

Invited to campus by the staff of The Highlander student newspaper as a follow-up to a healthcare summit the students held in April, the Governor discussed needs for a universal health care plan to cover the more than 770,000 Pennsylvanians who have no way to pay for a doctor’s visit.

University President Michael A. MacDowell, along with Board of Trustees Chairman Paul “Chip” Siegel and Trustees Murray Ulberg, Esq., and Monsignor John Bendik, welcomed the guest of honor. The Highlander

Misericordia University honored the family of Patrick J. and Helen McAndrew O’Connor with the Trustee Associates Award at the annual Trustee Associates Awards Dinner on Saturday, Nov. 22 at the Mohegan Sun at Pocono Downs. The annual award recognizes those who have demonstrated outstanding dedication, service and generous support to Misericordia in its tradition of providing a strong liberal arts education through the values of mercy, service, justice and hospitality.

Born and raised in Kingston, Helen McAndrew O’Connor graduated from St. Mary’s High School and married Attorney Patrick J. O’Connor. When Attorney O’Connor died at the age of 56, Helen found herself as single mother with 10 children to raise. Great support came from her husband’s sister, Sister Mary Crescentia O’Connor, RSM, Ph.D., who served as a professor of chemistry at Misericordia, and her own aunt, Sister Amelia Connor, RSM.

Their assistance allowed Helen the opportunity to accept the appointment as Luzerne County Register of Wills in January 1961, a position she was subsequently elected to for eight consecutive terms.

Through the help of the Misericordia community and the Sisters of Mercy, Helen, a woman of great faith and deep respect for the value of education, was able to provide a Catholic education for her children, and see that they earned bachelor’s and advanced degrees.

Misericordia presents Founders Medal to the William G. McGowan Charitable Fund

Misericordia University awarded one of its highest honors, the Founders Medal, to the William G. McGowan Charitable Fund during the annual Trustee Associates Awards Dinner on Saturday, Nov. 22 at the Mohegan Sun at Pocono Downs. The prestigious award, bestowed only as merited by the University’s Board of Trustees, recognized the McGowan Fund for a 14-year tradition of support to MU that has totaled more than $1.5 million.

The William G. McGowan Charitable Fund was established in 1992 to honor the legacy of William G. McGowan, recognized as both a visionary in the field of telecommunications and a humanitarian. It is dedicated to enhancing the role of American business, medical research and providing support for the potential Mr. McGowan saw in the future of the country’s youth.

Following a long tradition of support to Misericordia by William’s brother, Monsignor Andrew J. McGowan, who served for many years on the Misericordia Board of Trustees; their sister, Misericordia alumna Lenore McGowan Rosica ’44; and brother Thomas J. McGowan’s wife, Patricia Ann Hannigan McGowan ’56, the McGowan Charitable Fund has awarded gifts for the Mary Kintz Bevevino Library ($1 million) and Leading from the Heart Campaign ($500,000) in support of capital improvements on the campus.

The newly-renovated theater at Walsh Hall opened to rave reviews Dec. 8. The auditorium is named for retired Pennsylvania Senator Charles Lemmond and his wife, Barbara, and recognizes their years of service and dedication to Misericordia’s Dallas home and to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

The internationally renowned Boston Brass played to a packed 500-seat theater on opening night. Joining Senator Lemmond were Senators Robert Mellow, Lisa Baker, Ray Musto and state Representative Karen Boback, all of whom joined faculty, staff, trustees and friends in thanking the senator and his family for their years of service to the state and 20th District.
Alumni know this well — once a part of Misericordia, you’re always a part of Misericordia.

Pam Langdon ’05 is a case in point. In 1969 as a high school senior, she was accepted to Misericordia and earned a music scholarship to play the cello. Ultimately, she chose to attend another regional college but never forgot Misericordia.

Decades later, now well established as a professional career woman with a family, Pam wanted to earn a business degree.

“I looked around for a year for a degree program and couldn’t find the value,” says Langdon, who earned a degree in business administration. Then in 2003 she saw an ad for Expressway, MU’s accelerated degree program. “Misericordia made the classes convenient for working adults, with evening, online and weekend formats. For me it was weekend and evening classes that worked best.”

She was also attracted by Expressway’s affordable pricing as she could enroll in more classes under her employer’s tuition reimbursement plan.

Today, Langdon is a graduate student in the organizational management program at MU. As an associate vice president with a major regional health care system, she enjoys immediate returns on her studies.

“The courses are worthwhile, highly beneficial. The class work and research is on target and is often part of my daily experience at work,” she adds. Pam also enjoys a 33 percent discount on her graduate tuition as an alum.

“If MU ever established a Ph.D. program relevant to my work, I’d be among the first to register.”

Program accelerates career for nurse educator

Elizabeth Senczakowicz, B.S.N., R.N., C.N.O.R., is a professional nurse and an educator. As surgical technology program director for Luzerne County Community College and former nurse manager, she knows the value of excellence in nursing.

She enrolled in Expressway’s RN to BSN program to solidify her already noteworthy skill set. “I enrolled in Expressway in May 2006 and graduated in May 2007. I transferred in the maximum amount of general education credits and only needed to earn the required 30 credits at Misericordia to complete my Bachelor of Science Degree in Nursing (BSN),” she says.

“I had worked with other nurses who had completed the program in the past,” she adds. “From the first meetings with Joanna Naylor and Annette Weiss, my experience at Misericordia was positive.”

The hybrid and online formats allowed Senczakowicz to complete her degree quickly. “That would have been much more difficult if I would have had to attend all live classes in a non-accelerated format,” she explains.

After graduating from Misericordia with her BSN, Senczakowicz immediately began a graduate program at Drexel University, a premiere nursing education program. She will graduate with an MSN from Drexel in June. “The Expressway program offers high-quality education in a convenient format that allows working professionals to pursue higher education without sacrificing work and family commitments,” she says.
CACE names Director of Financial Services Education and Outreach

The Misericordia University Center for Adult and Continuing Education has named Christine Stevens Slacktish as the Director of Financial Services Education and Outreach Projects under one of two Wall Street West (WSW) grants.

She will be involved in active recruitment and corporate outreach to expand financial services education and develop a skilled regional workforce in the financial services sector to support WSW goals. The investment creates programs that will strengthen the workforce capacity to make the counties of Berks, Carbon, Lackawanna, Lehigh, Luzerne, Monroe, Northampton, Pike, Schuylkill and Wayne the pre-eminent locale for business attraction.

At Misericordia, she will help develop a curriculum for high school and traditional college students in the area of financial services, and work with adult students to develop continuing education classes and programs in financial services and banking. Slacktish has extensive experience in human resources, corporate sales and banking, and financing industry after serving as a mortgage loan specialist for Honesdale National Bank and as owner of Heritage Mortgage Group. She has an associate’s degree in applied science from Luzerne County Community College and a Bachelor of Laws degree, LLB with honors, from the University of Buckingham, England, as a Rotarian Scholar.

CACE announces Assistant Director for Off-Campus Programs

The Misericordia University Center for Adult and Continuing Education (CACE) has named Maki McCann as Assistant Director for Off-campus Programs and Special Initiatives.

In her expanded role, McCann will continue to manage all accelerated off-campus program locations for non-traditional students and oversee recruitment for the Expressway Program. She will also serve as the CACE liaison for Misericordia’s special projects, such as the Wall Street West financial services initiative that services a 10-county area in Northeastern Pennsylvania.

McCann earned her master’s degree in organizational management from Misericordia University. She also holds a Bachelor of Science degree in English from the University of Saints Cyril and Methodius in her native Republic of Macedonia. Prior to joining the Misericordia staff in 2004 as executive secretary to the president, she taught English as a second language at a military academy, a private language academy, a primary school and a high school in Skopje, Macedonia. She also has certification as an English Language Instructor from the Defense Language Institute at Lackland Air Force Base in San Antonio, Texas.

Barry Rogers

You might say that Misericordia is in the blood of the Rogers family. An “accident” may have steered Barry Rogers of Kingston, Pa., to Misericordia for his Master of Science degree in Education, he says, but it was the outstanding service, flexible schedule, and supportive faculty and staff he encountered at the Center for Adult and Continuing Education that eventually lead him to multiple degrees and his two sons and nephew to the campus when they were ready for college.

Today, at 59, Barry is the educational director of Lourdesmont Partial Hospitalization Program in Clarks Summit, Pa., and is an adjunct faculty member at Misericordia. His son Matthew ’04, received his degree in Interdisciplinary Studies. At age 27, he is a successful songwriter and journalist looking to make his mark on the music industry in Nashville, Tenn. His youngest son, Eric ’08 earned his Sport Management degree at MU and is an admissions representative for Allied Medical and Technical Institute in Forty Fort, Pa. In 2006, his nephew, Joseph ’06 received his Interdisciplinary Studies degree from Misericordia, while his Misericordia bride, Kari Bratt Rogers ’06 earned her bachelor’s degree in Medical Imaging. He is the distribution coordinator for Suburban Propane in Yatesville, Pa., and Kari is a medical imaging technician for Wyoming Valley Health Care System in Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Barry’s goal to be an educator began initially at King’s College in 1967. He began working in the building trades to earn money on the side, and although he earned his bachelor’s degree in English, he delayed getting his teaching certification to go into the tile business. He says his would-be short stay in the tile industry turned into a 25-year career. It wasn’t until the mid 1990s, when his work took him to the Misericordia campus that he decided to enter the master’s program in teacher education.

He says his first encounter was with Debbie Fries, and after a 10-minute talk, he was hooked. He says “wonderful teachers,” including his advisors Drs. Joseph Rogan, W. Scott Blanchard and Richard Lynch, guided him through classes in English and teacher education.

“My goal at the time was to retire from the tile and marble business, take life easy, and teach Shakespeare for the rest of my life in some little high school,” he says. “None of those things ever happened. In 1999, Dr. Rogan directed me to Lourdesmont for a field placement and I have been there ever since.”

Overall, Barry has earned his state certifications in Secondary Education/English and Special Education at MU, and fulfilled a personal goal by completing MU’s master’s program in Supervision of Curriculum. He is currently enrolled in the Administrative Leadership Program at Edinboro University. He has completed the K-12 Principal’s Certification and is scheduled to finish the Supervisor of Special Education Certification this spring.

“I credit MU for any success I have had in the field of education, especially Dr. Rogan, who has guided me, and has always been there when I needed him,” Barry says. “Though my present position is very far from where I started,
I feel it is where I belong at the moment. The children in the Lourdesmont program desperately need people who care about them and are willing to dedicate their lives in the fields of mental health, special education and social work.”

It was no surprise to him that his son, Matthew ’04, a standout track and field star at Wyoming Valley West High School, was recruited to join the fledgling Misericordia track program. When he entered the Honors Program in Interdisciplinary Studies, his father was 100-percent supportive.

Today, Matt is a songwriter and journalist, who has been recognized for a song that made it into the finals of the first American Idol songwriting competition. His song, Send Me on My Way, was one of 20 finalists from over 20,000 songs that were submitted during the 2007 season.

Matt credits the education he received for preparing him to get into one of the most acclaimed graduate programs for journalism in the country, the S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications at Syracuse University.

“I knew I always loved to write and my major at Misericordia allowed me to take a lot of writing courses, in fact so many writing classes in English and Philosophy that I ended up with minors in both,” he says.

While at Syracuse, it was an internship at Country Music Today magazine that lead him to Nashville, and his first job as a reporter for nearby HealthLeaders Magazine. With songwriting as his first love, he is currently spending five hours a day in songwriting sessions and performs as often as he can, hoping for that elusive break into the recording industry.

Eric was soon to follow in Matt’s footsteps. An outstanding high school track and field athlete, he loved the Anderson Outdoor Complex and Mangelsdorf Field, the small and intimate campus, and wanted to stay close to home.

As a Sport Management major, Eric interned with the Scranton/Wilkes-Barre Yankees Triple-A baseball team and discovered he liked the sales side of the business. Those experiences lead him to his current position as an admissions representative at Allied Medical.

“Allied students are interested in learning a specific trade or skill. Some have been out of high school a while and are in need of a solid job,” says Eric. “We try to walk them through the process and help them secure a job at the completion of their course sequence. It is very rewarding to see a student I enrolled graduate with a diploma and a good career opportunity.”

Barry’s nephew, Joseph Rogers was a member of the MU lacrosse team for four years and class president for three. He chose to major in Interdisciplinary Studies and was involved in Habitat for Humanity. Joe and his wife, Kari, who came to MU for the medical imaging program, married in 2005 and live with their daughters in West Wyoming, Pa.

“Misericordia has always been able to provide me with a course schedule that I could fit into the busy life I share with my wonderful wife, Betsy, and our sons,” Barry summarizes. “That is why I pointed them and our nephew toward MU when they decided to enter college. It is a great institution. We have all had wonderful experiences there.”

Former Misericordia University President, Dr. Albert Anderson, recently published his first work of fiction, Prexy: From the Journals of a Rookie College President, with Strategic Book Publishing.

Dr. Anderson was the president at Misericordia from 1995-98. He retired from a career in higher education and now resides in northern Minnesota. Prior to his book, Dr. Anderson had written numerous professional articles and books on philosophy, education and philanthropy.

His work of fiction provides an insider's look into the world of higher education in a traditional, small college setting. This heartwarming, humorous tale reads like a journal from inside the mind of a young man beginning a challenging position of leadership over more than 20 years. He is regularly tested, challenged, criticized and changed as he matures in his professional and personal life. The characters are rich and complex, the dialogue sharp and intelligent, and the story universally appealing.

Dr. Anderson’s first foray into fiction writing has been met with positive reviews. “Prexy offers carefully crafted insights about leadership, its trials and triumphs, its impact on person and family,” says Loren J. Anderson, President, Pacific Lutheran University, Tacoma, Wash. “There are two ironies to boot: First, while Prexy focuses on the rookie year, the fact is that every presidential year is filled with the same serious academic work, unexpected events, and colorful personalities that make the academy a wonderful home.

“Secondly, while Prexy never says it directly, the vocation of president is a gift; a gift because the mission of every college is precious, the dream of every student so important and the work as leaders is not work, it is a calling,” President Anderson concludes.

Baez headlines Under the Stars Arts Festival

Folk music legend Joan Baez will headline the Under the Stars Summer Arts Festival at the Wachovia Amphitheater in July that will also feature Vince Giordano and the Nighthawks.

For Baez, 2008 and 2009 are landmark years. They respectively mark 50 years since she began her legendary residency at Boston’s famed Club 47 and since she made her debut at the 1959 Newport Folk Festival.

The Starlight Concert, starring Baez, is Saturday, July 25 at 8 p.m. Festival tables that seat six are $360, amphitheater tickets are $30 and lawn seats are $20. The Jazz in July concert, Vince Giordano and the Nighthawks “Remember the Scranton Sirens,” is Tuesday, July 14 at 8 p.m. Festival tables are $120, amphitheater tickets are $15 and lawn seats are $8.

Tickets for both concerts go on sale May 4 through the Misericordia University Box Office at (570) 674-6719.

Baez’s earliest recordings fed a host of traditional ballads into the rock vernacular, before she unconsciously introduced Bob Dylan to the world in 1963 and focused awareness on songwriters like Woody Guthrie.

In 2007, Baez was the recipient of the prestigious Lifetime Achievement Award from the Recording Academy, Day After Tomorrow, her first new studio album in five years, was nominated for a Best Contemporary Folk/ American Album Grammy Award.

Jazz in July features Vince Giordano and the Nighthawks revisiting the classic big-band sounds of The Scranton Sirens. In 30 years as a bandleader, Giordano has become the authority on recreating the sounds of 1920s and 1930s jazz and popular music. “I just love the energy of the early jazz,” he says. “I wanted to recapture some of that.”

Giordano and the Nighthawks are renowned on the New York scene for their commitment to preserving and authentically presenting 1920s jazz and popular music. Together, they will recreate the sounds and re-introduce a generation to the sounds of Billy Lustig and the Scranton Sirens Orchestra.

Mercy sister authors Dallas history book

Detailing how Misericordia first opened its doors in 1924 as a small Catholic college in the midst of a decidedly Methodist community, Sister Anne Frances Pulling, RSM ‘62, takes her readers on a vivid trek through the rich stories and compelling history of the local community in her latest book, Dallas, Pennsylvania.

The 12th book authored by this Long Island, N.Y., native explores the history of the town back to its beginnings as a summer colony and how it grew as anthracite coal fields attracted immigrants to the area.

In the book’s final chapter, Sister Anne Frances, who holds a bachelor’s degree in education from Misericordia and a master’s degree from Fordham University, chronicles the history of Misericordia from its beginnings as the first four-year college in Luzerne County with 50 students and its rise to university status in 2007. The book is filled with nearly 200 historic photos she gathered from the Back Mountain Historical Society and University archives.

The cover is a depiction of the stone meditation garden at the well-known Windsor Park, the home of the local television series Windsor Park Stories.

Sister Anne Frances has had literary success taking readers inside many of the communities that she has served as a Sister of Mercy.

Her works include Babylon by the Sea, Altoona, Punxsutawney, Wind & Water Mills of Long Island, Central Islip, Around Cresson & the Alleghenies, and Around Blair County. She has also authored the title Sisters of Mercy of Loretto and Cresson.

Copies of Dallas, Pennsylvania are available for purchase by contacting Sister Anne where she resides at Mercy Center, Dallas, Pa., by phone at (570) 674-4778, or by email afprsm@aol.com.

Her books are available at a number of local retail outlets including Fino’s Pharmacy, the Heritage Shop and Ye Old Clock Shoppe, all in Dallas.
